Statement of Leadership Philosophy
Brian Dye

My philosophy of leadership centers on the belief that student success is institutional, purposeful, measurable and equitable. My leadership style will focus on the systematic empowerment of students, strengths building of teams, and alignment of New River Community College's efforts towards the mission of accessible, quality higher education.

At the foundation of effective leadership, are relationships. When individuals trust one another, it fosters meaningful collaboration and innovation among faculty, staff, students, and community partners. I am focused on creating an environment in which people are valued, supported and motivated to advance toward a common mission and to work toward a unified purpose. Through open communication and transparency, I aim to build consensus and buy-in for New River Community College's initiatives to advance student success.

A critical element of my leadership style is focused on the implementation of deliberate and transparent student pathways. Students fare best when their pathway to and through the NRCC is supported with clear, accessible and consistent guidance from the point of inquiry to completion and transition. I am dedicated to strengthening existing systems of advising, orientation and academic support which reduce barriers to student persistence; and to leveraging data to identify student outcome gaps and implement programmatic solutions to address them.

My leadership philosophy places high value on the empowerment of teams through professional development and shared leadership. Through mentorship of staff, support for risk taking, and promotion of continuous improvement, I aim to further strengthen existing teams that are characterized by a strong sense of accountability and excellent delivery of student-centered services while being able to adapt to changing student and community needs.

Equity will remain a guiding principle in my leadership. Because New River Community College serves diverse student populations with varying needs, NRCC's efforts must extend beyond academic support to encompass holistic support systems that address the factors outside of the college campus that can impact student persistence and success. These factors can include basic needs security, access to information and other resources, as well as individual well-being.

Finally, my approach to leadership is forward-thinking and adaptive. With the emerging opportunities presented by technology, data analytics, and forward-leaning best practices in higher education, I am committed to leading innovation in services designed to enhance student outcomes and academic achievement while continuing to stay grounded in the fundamental role of the New River Community College to serve all learners by providing pathways for their success.
